

Enagás obtains A+ rating from the Global Reporting Initiative for its 2008 Annual Report

The Global Reporting Initiative (GRI) has awarded Enagás's 2008 Annual Report an A+ rating, the highest accolade granted by this organisation which establishes the main international standard in drawing up Corporate Responsibility Reports.

The GRI has confirmed that Enagás's 2008 Annual Report, which includes the Corporate Responsibility Report, meets all the requisites of its Sustainability Reporting Guidelines.

This award demonstrates the company's firm pledge to pursue its commitment to sustainable development and recognises the exactness, quality and transparency of the information published in its Corporate Responsibility Report.

Before the A+ rating could be granted, external verification was required from independent auditor KPMG. Its audit confirmed that the quantitative data had been obtained in a trustworthy manner and that the qualitative information was based on internal documentation or that provided by third parties. To this end, the auditor interviewed the people responsible for supplying this data and reviewed the internal systems in place that generated the data on which this was based.

This acknowledgement is in line with Enagás's objectives in the area of Corporate Responsibility and with the planning of initiatives outlined in its Quality, Excellence and Sustainability Master Plan for 2009-2012.

The GRI is an independent body which acts as the official collaborator of the United Nations' Environmental Programme. Its guidelines form the main international standards for reporting on financial, environmental and social performance in the relevant Corporate Responsibility reports.
