

Enagás world leader in the utilities sector of the Dow Jones Sustainability Index

- The company keeps its place in the index for the fourth year running

Enagás has been selected as world leader in the utilities sector in the latest review of the Dow Jones Sustainability Index (DJSI). The company has kept its place in the index for the fourth consecutive year, and for the first time, has been included among the 19 companies that are leaders in the international field of each of the industrial sectors considered.

Enagás received top score in the Gas Distribution subsector to which it belongs, not only globally but also for each of the three dimensions assessed: economic, social and environmental. The company improved its global score by 13% compared to 2010.

These results further acknowledge the company's commitment to sustainability and bolster the commitments undertaken in the 2009-12 Quality, Excellence and Sustainability Master Plan which underpins the Enagás Sustainability Management Model.

The DJSI World Index annually reviews management at 2,500 companies and, following rigorous analysis, selects just 10% on the basis of financial, environmental and corporate responsibility criteria.

This index constitutes a key tool for the composition of socially responsible investment portfolios for investors throughout the world, as it groups together the leading sustainability-driven companies worldwide based on globally-recognised standards.
