

Enagás, the first Spanish company to have its Industrial Cybersecurity programme certified by AENOR

This certification recognises the robustness of the cybersecurity programme for operating Enagás' Yela Underground Storage Facility in Guadalajara.

Madrid, 25 September 2026. Enagás is the first Spanish company to obtain AENOR certification in accordance with the UNE-EN IEC 62443-2-1:2024 standard, which is one of the key international frameworks for cybersecurity in industrial facilities.

It recognises the industrial cybersecurity management programme that Enagás has implemented to protect the operation of the Yela Underground Storage Facility in Guadalajara, a key infrastructure asset in the Spanish Gas System. The IEC 62443-2-1 standard is a widely recognised framework for protecting technological systems used in essential infrastructure such as energy, transport and water systems. It aims to strengthen the cybersecurity of industrial systems and help ensure the continuity of the services they provide.

Protection of the systems that underpin operations

The certified programme covers two areas relating to the operation of the Yela Underground Storage Facility. The first is the Operational Support and Cybersecurity system, which provides essential services for protecting and operating Yela's infrastructure. These services include access management, information protection, and monitoring of technological systems.

The second area is the Yela Underground Storage Facility Industrial Control System, which enables the supervision, monitoring and control of the processes required for gas injection and extraction.

Commitment to safety and continuous improvement

This certificate strengthens Enagás' ability to identify, manage and mitigate cybersecurity risks affecting its facilities, ensuring safe, reliable and continuous operations.

It also recognises the company's cybersecurity management system, which is based on continuous risk assessment and the ongoing improvement of security measures at its facilities, in line with international best practice.
